[22] Connexion of one thing with another, as of cause with effect, predicate with subject, quality with substance, &c. [23] Devotion, spiritual worship of God, or union with the Supreme Being by means of abstract contemplation; this however does not necessarily imply an abandonment of the world, or relinquishment of the usual observances of religion, but it involves an internal indifference to objects of pleasure, and pain, and utter disregard of the consequences or fruit of ceremonial rites. [24] The particular practice of the preceding sort of devotion, or the exercise of that abstraction by which union with God is supposed to be obtained; in the Gitá it is described as sitting on Cuśa grass, with the body firm, the eyes fixed on the tip of the nose, and the mind intent on the deity; in the Tantras a fanciful operation is prescribed, by which the vital spirit seated in the lower part of the body, and the etherial spirit placed in the head, are supposed to be brought into conbination in the brain, when the devotee becomes united with Brahme. [25] The system of philosophy which treats of the union of the soul with Brahme or God; it is the same as the Pátanjali doctrine, and constitutes one of the six Dersanas or philosophical schools of the Hindus.
